MME. CAVALIERI NOT AFRAID OF BOSTON

Great Singer in Paris Denies Report That She Feared to Face Public.

BY CHARLES HENRY MELTZER.
Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, June 17.—The Cavalieri, noted singer of the Italian opera, who is expected to appear at the Grand Opera in Paris on June 20, has been reported to have been so terrified by the press that she has fled to her native town of Palermo.

Despite all rumors to the contrary, she has not fled, but has taken no steps yet to appear in public. Moreover, though there is reason to believe that more than one of her admirers, among whom is the much talked of Prince Dolgorouki, would gladly lead her to the marriage altar again, she has determined not to repeat her matrimonial experiences.

Within a fortnight, Cavalieri hopes, through the good offices of her manager, the Countess Moltke, to appear in the world's greatest opera house, the Grand Opera, in the role of the Countess Moltke.

The fact that Mme. Cavalieri has not fled, but has taken no steps yet to appear in public, is a fact which she has not denied. She has, however, denied the report that she has fled to her native town of Palermo.

It is not generally known that Cavalieri has been very successful in her career. She has won the highest honors of the Italian opera, and has been the favorite of the most distinguished of her admirers.

"FOR HE'S A JOLLY GOOD FELLOW"

THE PICTURE AND THE STORY IT TELLS

Copyright, 1908, by "Lida" Pub. Co.

Two o'clock in the morning, and the wife, tired out after a weary night of watching, is sobbing out her grief alone, while the "jolly good fellow" drinks to the health and happiness of everybody else, wrecking his business, as well as his health and happiness of himself and his wife and other dear ones.

It was through "social drinking" that this "good fellow" became addicted to the liquor habit. His real friends plead with him to quit drink, and he tries to do so, but he cannot, as that terrible desire, and craving for drink which causes the "jolly good fellow" to so quickly forget his duty to his wife, home and loved ones is the result of alcoholic poison in his system—this man needs the right kind of medical help just as much as the patient suffering from typhoid fever or any other disease.

It has been very gratifying to the writer to talk with many "good fellows" in all walks of life, from the millionaire to the day laborer, who have been, in the past, down and out through drink, but who state emphatically that they were relieved of all desire and craving for liquor by the Neal Treatment.

Three days is not such a long time in which to turn from a down-and-out upward career and probably this fact explains why so many men have been able to leave their business for a three-day treatment at the Neal Institute, and at the end of that time return to home, office, children, friends and business new men and new ease of the word, with renewed energy, increased ambition and

Invites Everybody to lunch-Free

Stop wiggling! The day and the hour is here. Tomorrow we all go to luncheon together.

Yes! you can be a guest of Yours truly.

No! you don't have to wiggle your third finger. You may if you want to—Yours truly has called the wiggle test off.

A lady from Lynn has rheumatism in both hands. She wants to be one of the party. A veteran from New Hampshire writes he lost one of his arms in the Civil War, and he can't wiggle the fingers on his left hand.

So we've decided to throw the invitation wide open. Everybody's invited whether you can wiggle your third finger or not.

Tomorrow Yours truly wants you to be a guest at luncheon.

HOW, WHY and WHERE

This is the first of a series of Yours truly treats. It begins with Yours truly Pork and Beans—a delicious combination of the best triple picked Michigan beans, tomato puree and streak-o-lean pork.

Simply fill out the coupon, present it to your grocer and he will hand you a full-sized ten cent can of delicious Yours truly Pork & Beans absolutely free. Serve them for luncheon tomorrow—they make a meal in themselves.

There is no obligation on your part—we simply want you to get acquainted with the new zip and flavor of Yours truly.

The only condition we make is that you present it tomorrow—Monday, June 19th.

Not the day after tomorrow. The luncheon is for one day only.

A Revolution in Food Products

Yours truly is opening a new era in food products. An evolution has been in progress. A revolution has set in. Now—for the first time—you can go to a grocery store and be sure of getting the best in many kinds of foods if you simply remember the words "Yours truly" and see that they are on the package you get.

It has taken years to accomplish this boon that housewives have long longed for.

Yours truly has searched the country for the best makers in different lines of food.

The hunt for supreme quality has extended from Maine to California. It is not yet finished.

This only we want to impress on your mind now—if you want the purest and best in foods look for "Yours truly" on the package. It will take some time for all grocers to get all Yours truly goods in stock—but insist.

But we can already confidently say that if you want the finest pork and beans, the best canned soups, the most delicious coffee, the most nutritious Macaroni and Spaghetti, the purest, smoothest Chocolate and Cocoa, the most pungent spices, the flavoriest extracts, see that the name "Yours truly" is on the package.

There are other Yours truly products, such as Sweet Piccallette (a new kind of relish), Tomato Catsup in old style bottles, and in the new economy cans, Salad Dressing without oil, so that it can never spoil, Sweet Corn of the new kind, and other articles which we will describe in detail later.

COUPON

I want to take luncheon with Yours truly. Please deliver to me one full-sized ten cent can of Yours truly Pork & Beans FREE. If I like them I may try other Yours truly products, but I place myself under no obligations.

Neverslip Shoes

(SOLD ONLY AT FILENE'S)
Made with heavier soles than any other shoes for Babies in the world. This means they do not feel pebbles or anything else they step upon. Again, the soles are PERFECTLY FLAT, so that the child's foot will rest flat on the ground—most shoes are curved. These are only 2 of the reasons why they are the best shoes for your Baby.

The Real Story of a Real Manicure Girl

She Exposes Male Flirts, Whose Unwelcome Attentions Make the Business Almost Unendurable

THE MANICURE GIRL HAS TO SMILE AND PRETEND INTEREST WHILE LISTENING TO OPEN OR PARTLY VEILED GALLANTRIES BY HER CUSTOMERS

The older they are the more they get mania.

"That's not what I want!" I had to smile.

The big hand had been put on my shoulder and the girl was smiling at me.

Two hands were put on my shoulders and the girl was smiling at me.

Pretty Operators Soon Discover That Fixing Fingers Is Only Part of the Business, and That to Earn a Living or Retain Their Positions They Must Listen to the Conversation of Male Flirts Among Their Patrons

MRS. RADIE KNOWLTON left the house at 10 o'clock and went to her place of business. She was a manicure girl in a Washington street barber shop.

She was a perfectly respectable, hard working girl and I am sure, but no thanks to the bankers and brokers and business men that used to patronize me when I worked in a Washington street barber shop for three months and I earned good money, but the things I had to put up with would make a saint weep.

When I got through I knew all about human nature—that is, male human nature—and I don't think much of it.

In any other business you just put up your nose, get ready to wait on customers, transact business and that's all. The manna that work that way never to death—Mrs. Knowlton, a real manna girl.

One day I was sitting at my table and a man came in. He was a very nice looking man, but he was a flirt. He was a very nice looking man, but he was a flirt. He was a very nice looking man, but he was a flirt.

FUNERALS

I want to attract the attention of every thinking man and woman in Greater Boston. My mission in this city is to save thousands of dollars annually to the citizens who are now contributing enormous profits to the funeral trust.

I will take charge of the funeral services for any deceased at a price agreed upon in advance, and guarantee to give perfect satisfaction in every way. The cost of the funeral—everything will be in strict keeping with the solemnity of the occasion.

And, above everything else, I guarantee to save the ones responsible for the funeral bills anywhere from 35 to 50 per cent. of the TRUST cost of properly paying the last tributes to the departed.

CORONATION OF GEORGE V. TO ECLIPSE ALL OTHER HISTORY

More Than $10,000,000 Expended Alone on Decorations for the Sombre City of London

More than One-Quarter of the Vast Army of Visitors are Americans who are Paying Fabulous Prices to View the Gorgeous Procession of George and Mary Through the Streets of the British Capital.

LONDON, June 17.—After a year's past in making elaborate preparations, England is at last ready for the coronation of King George V. and his consort, Queen Mary. This great event, which has been looked forward to with such eager expectancy by British subjects all over the world, will undoubtedly be recorded as one of the most magnificent spectacles in the history of the British empire. No detail has been left unattended, and, while previous coronations have been chiefly adorned to it, it is safe to say that few coronations, in the 800 years of history of the British empire, could in any measure approach the coming one.

A fact which has increased the enthusiasm of the British subjects is the comparative youth of the new King and Queen. While King Edward was generally popular, his advanced age and feeble health cast a shadow over his coronation festivities in 1902. King George, however, is only in his forty-fifth year, and from all accounts is the best of health, and his reign is looked forward to as a long and prosperous one.

Although festivities incident to the coronation have been under way for several months, the official coronation will not begin until to-morrow, when representatives of the various European countries will arrive. The great spectacle will come Thursday, when the king and queen will be crowned in Westminster Abbey, and from then until the 28th it will be one continuous round of special functions, pageants, reviews, processions, exhibitions, concerts, etc., so that no one here need be disappointed.

SOMBRE OLD LONDON IS NOW A RIOT OF COLOR.

In honor of this great event, London is watching "honor," as any account left you a riot of color. It is estimated that all some out of your head. "Don't carry your money to your head," says one of the many "don'ts" which are being issued. "Don't carry your money to your head," says one of the many "don'ts" which are being issued. "Don't carry your money to your head," says one of the many "don'ts" which are being issued.

London stands from which to view the procession on Thursday and Friday. Every street along the route, and especially the one that runs from the Tower to the Albert Hall, is now a riot of color. There is not a foot of available space in the entire city. The streets are so packed with people that it is not possible to get a car or a horse-drawn carriage. The streets are so packed with people that it is not possible to get a car or a horse-drawn carriage. The streets are so packed with people that it is not possible to get a car or a horse-drawn carriage.

It would be difficult to form an idea of the enormous hordes of visitors that have flocked to this great metropolis. They have come from every country on the globe and number at least a million. Of this amount one-quarter, at least, are Americans, and it is this class that comprises the most enthusiastic and the most numerous of the visitors. The streets are so packed with people that it is not possible to get a car or a horse-drawn carriage.

Like a Fairy City. London to-day resembles a fairy city. The millions of electric lights that have been strung in every conceivable place, with an eye to the artistic, have converted the city into a fairy city. The streets are so packed with people that it is not possible to get a car or a horse-drawn carriage.

As has been expected, every house and building has been decorated. The proprietors have been forced to come down a little on their prices, owing to the fact that the prices for many of the things, but they are still selling between two and three times as much as they ordinarily do. A number of the landlords have taken up their abode in the numerous "flat" houses, which have been erected in a number of the parts. This is an innovation for London, and has proved very successful. By sleeping beneath the canopy, the visitor can see his bed and board for a reasonable sum.

Prices on the ordinary commodities of life are way beyond their ordinary level. While but few of the things are sold at such prices, the prices for many of the things are sold at such prices. The prices for many of the things are sold at such prices. The prices for many of the things are sold at such prices.

The police are doing their best to keep the streets clear. The police are doing their best to keep the streets clear. The police are doing their best to keep the streets clear. The police are doing their best to keep the streets clear.

There are in the neighborhood of 30,000 visiting soldiers from all parts of the world. There are in the neighborhood of 30,000 visiting soldiers from all parts of the world. There are in the neighborhood of 30,000 visiting soldiers from all parts of the world.

Among other "don'ts" the guardians of the peace, the police, advise their visitors, "don't let a stranger take your money." Among other "don'ts" the guardians of the peace, the police, advise their visitors, "don't let a stranger take your money."

The Queen's sceptre is of much the same character, but considerably smaller, and is encrusted with diamonds and other precious stones, but the stem is not encrusted with the same elaborate fashion. Tradition gives the Queen Consort at a coronation robes of velvet with ermine linings and a gown of white satin decked with pearls and tassels of bellion. Queen Alexandra, however, broke the tradition, and decided to wear a gown of gold, in color to reflect the colors of the Union Jack.

Here is the Flanders "4" Motorcycle

Made in the World's Largest Motorcycle Factory. It is a Big, Powerful, Beautiful Machine, Combining all that is Best and the Price is a Little More than Half—$175. Magneto included—of course.

THIS IS THE MOTORCYCLE you have heard so much about. We hope this announcement will quell the anxiety of other makers—now that they know the worst they may rest easier!

EVER SINCE IT BECAME KNOWN that Flanders, the man who makes the E-M-F "30" and Flanders "20" automobiles, was interested in the manufacture of motorcycles, nothing else has been talked of in trade circles.

IT WAS AMUSING to listen to the many stories that were told. Some of them were weird—and all were far from the truth. They originated doubtless from the fact that it was known we were experimenting on something very different from present types—experiments that may or may not come to something in the future.

HERE ARE THE FACTS: The Flanders "4" is not an experiment in any sense—nor is there a single radical feature about it. It is a standard, four-horse power, belt-driven motorcycle—a trifle larger, longer, yet lighter, and more powerful and much better built than other "4's".

THE PRICE IS SENSATIONAL that's all—price and quality.

YOU WILL RECALL that Flanders' success in the automobile industry was made, not by inventing a new kind of motor car, but by taking the best $2,500 car that could be found, manufacturing them in thousands instead of hundreds and selling them for just half the former price. Of course, the profit was small on each car—but on thousands it figured up pretty fast. And the low price made it possible to sell all and more than the big factories could make.

THE REST IS HISTORY—no other car in the world enjoys so splendid a reputation. Over 30,000 delighted owners will tell you it has no equal.

NOW GET THIS—it's important! We are following the same plan. We have nothing new—just a standard "four" motorcycle made as much better than others as we know how. The genius of this organization is designing and manufacturing about—our strong point is making things in immense quantities. We have the capital, the factories and the experience.

THEN WE SELL IT FOR LESS—much less. Why? Simply because if we are to manufacture say 80,000 motorcycles per year we must place the price within the reach of that many people—working men, clerks, as well as business men. Every ten dollars added to the price cuts down the demand—less people can afford the price.

BESIDES IT COSTS HEAVILY to sell an article for more than it is worth. The customer knows about how much he should pay and get one hundred cents' worth for every dollar.

MOTORCYCLES ARE TOO HIGH PRICED—the value isn't there. The Flanders "4" will correct that.

WHEN FLANDERS ENTERED the automobile business prices were fifty per cent higher than they are now—the reason other makers have been so worried of late was because they knew the advent of Flanders in the motorcycle business meant a revolution of both price and quality in this as it did in the automobile business.

THE PRICE IS $275.00—magneto included—of course. Flanders was the first to say no automobile was complete without a magneto—we say it again now—no motorcycle is complete without a first-class magneto—and we use the Spittford—admitted best. Others charge $36 to $46 extra for a magneto—and a foreign one at that.

AS FOR THE REST—we need not waste space here on technical specifications. They are all in the catalog and you can have one for the asking. Suffice it to say this is a fast, clean machine—58 1/2 inch wheel base; 53 inch wheels with 5 1/2 inch tires. Heavily dished for the weight for Flanders "4" is 95 pounds lighter than the next lightest motorcycle of the same size.

WHY? BECAUSE instead of heavy, uncertain steel castings we use drop forgings and stampings scientifically heat treated. In other words, we use the same kind of materials that are used in first-class automobiles and so we are able to make a lighter yet stronger machine. Of course, we need not tell you the advantages of lightness in a motorcycle—you know them yourself!

NOW IF THIS WERE A NEW and unknown concern you might have reason to doubt the quality of this motorcycle—agents for other machines selling for $225 to $350 will, of course, try to tell you a first-class 4 horsepower, belt-driven pipe engine motorcycle can't be made and sold at a profit for $175.00—including a Spittford magneto.

BUT YOU KNOW THE NAME FLANDERS. You know it stands head and shoulders above all others in the automobile industry—and above all you know—all the world knows—that name stands for quality and fair dealing.

SO WE NEEDN'T answer that statement which, of course, other makers will make—because they must. It is the only thing left for them to say.

YES, WE WILL answer it—by saying that the Flanders guarantee goes with every motorcycle—and all the world knows what that means, too.

JUST A WORD about deliveries. Already the fame of this machine has spread over the country and we have a large number of orders on hand. You may have to wait a little, but it will be worth it as you will get a better motorcycle for much less.

PERHAPS THERE ISN'T a dealer in your immediate territory yet—we are signing them up as fast as we can, but it takes time, especially as we are very careful to select the best—men who will properly represent the Flanders policy.

IF THERE ISN'T a dealer in your vicinity you can send your order to the factory direct—we won't get any better bargain, but we promise you a delivery in your proper order—no partiality.

DEALERS: Perhaps we haven't signed up in your territory yet—only way to find out is to write our Sales Manager at the factory. You will have to measure up to the standard to secure this agency. So if you want it, hurry—and when writing tell him all about yourself and why you think you are entitled to this plum. Ten of these machines will be sold for every one you are now selling—greater value for the money.

Some Real Fun About Real Estate--By

MORTON AND MOORE

MMORTON—I'm a landed proprietor now.
MOORE—Yes; and I know the name of the fellow who landed you.
MORTON—Do you know that my lot is the highest in Jersey?
MOORE—Yes; at any price.
MORTON—Why, it's so bright on the river you can see the water front from my parlor.
MOORE—And at high tide you can bathe in the kitchen.
MORTON—Well, that's all right. At low tide it's a boat house and at high tide a house boat.
MOORE—When are you going to have a house warming?
MORTON—To-morrow. My wife's mother is coming. But, seriously speaking, Frank, it's great to own a house and lot in Jersey. You'll be buying the outfit soon.
MOORE—I will, eh?—A dog house and a lot of pups. Quite a long distance over there, isn't it?
MORTON—How do you make that out?
MOORE—It's taken you about ten years to get over. What kind of a lot have you purchased?
MORTON—It's a hundred by fifty.
MOORE—You mean it cost you a hundred and it's worth fifty.
MORTON—No, I don't. I mean it's a hundred feet one way and fifty feet the other.
MOORE—What, the lot or the mortgage?
MORTON—You talking about a mortgage—you don't know what a mortgage is.
MOORE—Oh, yes I do. It's taken from two Latin words "mort," meaning dead, and "guarantee," meaning a measure. So when you have a mortgage, you are, in a measure, dead.

MORTON—Gee, I wish you'd put a mortgage on the mosquitoes over there.
MOORE—Can you get there by water?
MORTON—Sure thing, but the water wagon isn't running this hot weather.
MOORE—I was just about to remark that I'm a fine young pilot.
MORTON—You a pilot? All you can pilot is a schooner over a bar.
MOORE—Well, I know where the big schooners are unloaded, anyway.
MORTON—Yes; and you're always there to do your share of the unloading, too.
MOORE—Let us, Jim; I can steer a straight course, any way, and I have a perfect knowledge of all the bars.
MORTON—Many a good, old cruiser steers along on an even keel when fully loaded, too.
MOORE—Ever going to sell the place?
MORTON—I've thought of unloading it on Bobby North.
MORTON—But I thought he was a close friend of yours.
MORTON—He is; I'm counting on that.
MOORE—Understand you had an offer from Cliff Gordon.
MORTON—I did; he offered me $10,000 for it.
MOORE—Ten thousand dollars? Why, that fellow hasn't got ten dollars to his name.
MOORE—I know, but it's a fine offer, isn't it?
MORTON—Looking at picture of house?—Gee, look at that big hole in the street in front of the place? Why don't you fill it up?
MORTON—I should say so. I've nearly paid off the mortgage pulling automobiles out of that hole.

MOORE—Leave it a while longer and you'll think it's a New York street. That's a nice lawn in front of the place. What kind of flowers are you going to plant there?
MORTON—Buckwheat and oatmeal.
MOORE—Great! Buckwheat's a nice crop in pairs.
MORTON—What's your favorite flower, Frank?
MOORE—Hops.
MORTON—I've got all the comforts of a real home, Frank. Just bought a vacuum cleaner.
MOORE—Great! Buckwheat's a nice crop in pairs.
MORTON—Had a fine fishing trip, too, over there. Caught eighteen fish.
MOORE—I didn't know your cellar was as big as that. How is the hunting?
MORTON—Fine. All the equipment you need is a can of insect powder.
MOORE—How do you get along with your neighbors?
MORTON—Nicer, thank you. He's a graduate of a deaf and dumb school.
MOORE—It's a wonder you don't start a theatre over there.
MORTON—I would if there was anybody else to come to the show. But I had a great game of cards the other night.
MOORE—Huh? You always did like to play solitaire. What's the population of your Jersey village?
MORTON—I don't know, but all my wife's relatives have not arrived.
MOORE—Are you going to raise chickens over there?
MORTON—What's the use? Aren't there enough with the show?
MOORE—I understand it's pretty cold over there in the winter.
MORTON—That's all right. I'll come home late and wife will make it hot enough for me.

MOORE—Is it quiet over there?
MORTON—Well, it will be after we get that new noiseless pump upon working.
MOORE—Do you know, somehow or not, I got poor President Plunk of Mexico.
MORTON—It's don't live in Jersey, who give him?
MOORE—Four cheap, murderers after him every minute. How would you like to have death staring you in the face?
MORTON—Who'd be afraid of a few thousand insects after bucking those fleets of mosquitoes in Jersey?
MOORE—Gee, I'll sit down and get a house in the country, too, Jim. I'm thinking of marrying your sister, but I know I'm not half good enough for her.
MORTON—That's what sister says, too, but mother says to go ahead. You're the best she can get, anyway.
MOORE—Got any dirty dolls over there?
MORTON—Whole State is full of them.
MOORE—Well, how do you like this one? If Java is coffee, is spaghett?
MORTON—All right, but try this one. If Mutt can pitch a ball can I laugh?
MOORE—If Alvin Karpis is a high authority in shoe business, is Marcus Loew?
MORTON—Since they found Betty Green why don't you skin her?
MOORE—When Anna Held four acres, can you imagine how Ziegfeld?
MORTON—If the city is a loser in the subway deal, is our Mayor Gaynor?
MOORE—If blunts had to go to work packing sardines would he use the subway?
THE AUDIENCE:
—If we've had enough of Morton, can we stand Moore?

THE ARTIST TAKES HOME A POSE OF HIS SWEETHEART-MODEL

"NEVILLE showed them some photographs of his new picture, 'The Bride.' The prints passed from hand to hand amid various comments.
 "It is very beautiful, Louis," said his mother with a smile; and even as she spoke the smile faded and her sad eyes rested on him wistfully.
 "Is it a sacred picture?" asked his father, examining it through his glasses without the slightest trace of interest.
 "It is an announcement, isn't it?" inquired Lily, calmly. But her heart was failing her, for in the beauty of the exquisitely enraptured face she saw what might have been the very soul of Valerie West."—From "The Common Law," in the July issue of the Cosmopolitan Magazine. MARRIAGE is nothing but an institution for the blind. Before marriage a young man will give his sweetheart a lock of his hair; after marriage she helps herself.

I HAD rheumatism once. Do you know, there are more cures for rheumatism than the population of China. I took pills by the bushel. I took so many pills that all my joints are ball bearing.

I WENT to see a doctor and he sent me to a hospital. In the cot next to me was a fellow with a broken wooden leg. He got a splinter in his leg, infection set in and a knot fell out.

ANOTHER subject that appeals to me is the mother-in-law question. On all sides we hear of the poor mother-in-law. She is constantly harassed in the daily papers. Wherever her name is mentioned it is greeted with a laugh. When you go to the theatres epithets are hurled at her, hot and heavy. I consider it a shame. It is a disgrace. I think so much of my dearly beloved mother-in-law—yes, this is true—that every Sunday, rain or shine, I take a trip up to the cemetery to see if she is still there.

JUDGE—Prisoner, what's your name?

Prisoner—Antonio the Barb.

Judge—Let me see. I've seen your face somewhere.

If I'm not mistaken, I think I got shaved by you once.

Prisoner—You're right, Mr. Judge.

Judge—Well, you're a rotten barber. The last time you shaved me you cut me up so badly that when I reached home I had to fill my mouth with water to see if my face leaked.

JUDGE—How many children have you Tony?

Prisoner—Six, I guess.

Judge—Why do you say, "Six I guess"? Don't you know how many you've got?

Prisoner—Mr. Judge, I haven't been home in two or three days.

CHAPTER XXII

A TRIP OF WITS

It was tonight in St. Louis. One of the hottest days yet experienced in that hot city was just drawing to a close, and the clean lined and clean pocketed young man playing ball for John McElraw was seated outside one of the leading hotels in the Missouri metropolis.

"I didn't like that crab meat we had for supper to-night, boys," said Larry Doyle. "This is a half-porcion town."

"I really enjoyed it," said Harold Hangover, mildly. "It seemed very edible."

"It seemed very what?" demanded Captain Doyle.

"It seemed very edible," repeated Harold Hangover, in the low, well modulated voice so familiar to all his creditors.

"Who asked you to horn into this talk?" asked Doyle.

"I did not mean to intrude," said Harold, gently. "I merely ventured the assertion that the crab meat I ate to-night was quite palatable."

"What do you know about crab meat?" sneered Chief Meyers. "You never had anything to eat in Ozonoh except jerked pork."

Harold Hangover turned and regarded the powerful Indian with a fixed stare.

"Perhaps all I ever had to eat in Ozonoh was jerked pork," he retorted earnestly, "but I think Providence that I was never an actor."

A dangerous glitter came into the dark eyes of the Indian catcher.

"See here, young fellow," he said, trying to assume the stolid attitude for which his forebears were noted, "we here, when you try to kid me you are treading on very thin ice."

"Gleee!" exclaimed Harold, now thoroughly aroused. "An actor is a man who couldn't be on this ice. I'll leave it to you, then. Here he comes."

The manager of the Cardinals bave in sight at that moment, and took in the situation at a glance. "What's the matter, boys?" he asked.

"Alter enough," said Meyers. "This fresh wart from Wisconsin is getting so swelled up on himself that he wants us to treat him as an equal. Here he is, and to give us an argument about the food we get down to us at this hotel."

"It is kind of rotten," admitted Roger Breannah, "but it ought to be good enough for a backwoodsman like you, Hangover."

"I may be a backwoodsman!" exclaimed Harold Hangover, "but I never drew no salary from a woman."

"The shaft struck home. Breannah, turning as white as the print paper on which those lines are recorded his head and slowly walked away."

CHAPTER XXIII

BREANNAH'S REVENGE

It was now as at last. The largest assemblage yet had ever been a contest in the thriving city of St. Louis was within the enclosure when the tired youths tossed the new balls to Breannah's star pitcher, and took up his position behind the plate.

It was a beautiful day and a beautiful crowd. The vast of brass bands, crowded with the daughters of prosperous poor parents. Old timers told of the days when Breannah and Conkley thrilled the Missouri populace with their wonderful feats, and deplored the fact that had brought such disolute youngsters as Jack Powell and Mike Vaidely across the Eads Bridge to mar the fair fame of St. Louis.

Harold Hangover, fired to pitch for the Glants, was fighting about near the visiting players' bench when Breannah yelled him. "The money catcher of the Cardinals team had chased over to catch a high foul, and the fact that he muffed it indignantly didn't make his temper any more amiable.

"Hello, farmer!" he sneered. "This is the day that you are going to get yours. Your outfielders will have their backs to the stand most of the afternoon, and their tongues will be hanging out."

Harold Hangover listened to the taunts of the Cardinal leader with the same calm and serene brow that he always showed in times of stress.

"I am sorry to have injured your enemy, Mr. Breannah," he said, "my duty is my duty, and I fear I shall have to defeat your boys today with my 'sneez ball'."

Harold Hangover was full of tricks. His resource was proverbial; at his "sneez ball" didn't happen to be moving itself again, he used his "alum ball," the ball that strank so decidedly under the influence of the alum that it looked not unlike a little liver pill. If the "alum ball" failed to foil the people on the other team, he used his "beer ball," the invention that he had perfected on one of his trips around the Western States.

On this particular day, our hero resolved to use his "sneez ball," and he had enough snuff in his back pocket to sneeze six barometers into apoplexy. Little did he know the fate in store for his pet invention that day. "Could we but draw aside the curtain and peek into the future, we might be better men."

Beginning in the first inning, the Cardinals slammed Harold Hangover's "sneez ball" to every corner of the ball park, to every corner of the lot where no outfielder happened to be standing.

Our hero was plainly at a loss. No matter how much snuff he rubbed on the ball, the St. Louis batters refused to sneeze, and when the game was over the claims had been defeated by a score of 19-5.

"Say, Jasper," said Manager Breannah, after the game, "ain't you next to why my men didn't sneeze?"

He showed Harold Hangover a small, wooden article, and our hero turned pale with anger and mortification. To defeat the purpose of the "sneez ball," THE ST. LOUIS BATTERS HAD WORN CLOTHES PINS ON THEIR NOSES!

How to Become an Artist.

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Publishing, Great Britain Rights Reserved

DAUBLEY McPLASCH, the infamous impressionistic artist, who would have been hung in the Louvre, or any other place if he could have been caught, has been engaged at a fabulous price to take charge of the art department of our "Museum in Parvo, Pro Bone Publico" Correspondence School.

Here is his introductory remark: "Take it in the late Summer or early Fall, when one has tired of outdoor sports and time hangs heavy, why not become an artist?"

"It presents the double value of being classy and to the clever man, profitable. It is as simple as child can learn it. The first step, of course, is the studio."

STUDIO:

RENT a suite in the most aristocratic section of the city. In these attic rooms in the slums an artist has to deliver the actual goods. In an ultra-fashionable and exclusive studio all one has to do is to deliver the five o'clock tea and a bunch of piffing conversation.

Ransack auction rooms for antiques. Hang musty tapestries about the walls, place Indian tabourets, Turkish divans, Flemish sideboards, English set tees, Colonial chairs, Dutch tables, Swiss what-nots, Roman benches, Persian rugs and German steins all over the studio room. Add an English wheel tea table, a cake shelf stand, a Russian tea caddy, a Grand Randa cellarette and red plush swing to the outfit.

Secure a mammoth easel, with a roturm, or platform, scatter half a cord of dirty paint brushes about in jars and jugs and crocks, have three dozen palettes, paint-filled, hanging about where the ladies will not brush against them, secure forty charcoal sketches, little studies, second-hand paintings, all unframed, and have them all over your neck and corner.

Secure from some swell printer samples of name cards. You will get about fifty each bearing the name of swell people, some with coronets, some with mourning borders, some divorce announcements, and some, only rarely, tiny birth announcements. Scatter these on a silver salver where your callers may read them and be duly impressed.

THE ARTIST:

PERSONAL attention is next. Wear a very thin, opera bouffe Van Dyke beard, wear your hair long and thick, wear a flowing Windsor tie, a velvet coat and baggy trousers, with a loose white linen studio coat over all, this to be well daubed with paints. Of course, a shirt goes with this outfit,

THE WORK:

NOW comes the actual work. Send out your invitations. Let it be known you serve real vodkas with your tea and cigarettes made for the late Sultan. Also advertise the fact that you are to have three fresh divorces (most of them are), the bride of eighteen of an English nobleman of sixty-eight, a lady contortionist who was once a princess of the blood royal. Such a person may be secured from any circus.

RECEPTION:

BE busily engaged daubing colors on a mammoth canvas when your guests arrive in a bunch. Look at the clock, listen prettily, and hastily remove the studio coat.

Tell them to make themselves at home, tell each woman privately she is your ideal and you want her to sit for "Venus Triumphant" or "Daphne at the Grocers" or some such classical subject.

Push buttons ostentatiously and have Hindoo servants serve the tea and vodka, also the cakes and cigars. When your guests are properly enthused with the aid of the vodka, which is to be at least 100 proof, you can sell them anything from a postage stamp for a steel engraving to a colored soap wrapper for a genuine Michelangelo.

ACTUAL PAINTING:

AFTER you have sold about 500 sketches and about 500 paintings from the junk art rooms, take at a fabulous price, some one may want to see you actually paint a picture. Fine!

Lay in 300 cheap paintings, unframed; paint your initials on them. You can get these for about $140 each.

With the aid of a yardstick make a horizontal line across the middle of your canvas with a pencil. In the middle of this line and the middle of the canvas lay the top of a jam jar or a saucer and trace a circle around it.

On top of this horizon line, with some stencil patterns, trace some trees and castles. Now you are ready for the callers. When the ladies are scattered about the place take up your palette, look dreamily through the skylight, pose daintily and slap a dark blue above the line. Now paint the castles and trace a terra verde above the line. In the disc slap a gob of orange color. On the bottom half paint a darker shade of blue.

Now unfasten the top half of the canvas and bend it down across the horizon line, press gently, and replace canvas. You now have the reflection impressed below the horizon; your palette, look dreamily through the skylight, pose daintily and slap a dark blue above the line. Now paint the castles and trace a terra verde above the line. In the disc slap a gob of orange color. On the bottom half paint a darker shade of blue.

Now unfasten the top half of the canvas and bend it down across the horizon line, press gently, and replace canvas. THE SUBURBAN GARDEN—
AND WHY.

A SUBURBAN garden is second nature to every suburbanite. It is more than a cult—it is a habit. One of the first families conducted a successful garden in the well-known suburb of Eden.

As a result of knowledge gained in this garden, every male descendant of the head of this family has grown, with more or less success, that widely known fruit, Adam's apple. To be sure, some are of the crab variety, while others are plippies; but it all adds force to our argument, that amateur gardening is a habit.

TRUCK OR KITCHEN GARDEN.

BEANS—Sow these early. Each bean should have a wide hem, with buttonhole stitching around the eyes. For the white pea bean use white cotton; for the kidney bean use red silk to match.

Purchase at any delicatessen store two dozen second-hand bean pots. Fill with beans, to which a half pound of pork, spoonful of mustard and half cup of molasses have been added. Plant these pots in hills, two feet apart, going and coming. If there are no hills in your garden, have a few imported at small cost. Footfalls will do for the beginner.

Wax beans should be planted in the shade to prevent mauling. String beans may be secured by paring two quarts of ordinary beans and, when soft, stringing them as a child strings beads. Plant these in soil for them to grow. Set these cans out in a row, five together. For a trellis take the binds from the house and nail them firmly to posts set along the row of peas.

The simplest method of producing a variety is to secure of some printer a quantity of labels, such as are pasted on the cans, attach these labels to the vines, using as many variety labels as you desire varieties of peas.

MELONS—This dainty little breakfast food is so easily raised one need give no bother about them, once they are properly planted. Secure half a dozen seed melons, and with a clean, sharp knife make from fifty to seventy-five little holes, equal distances apart, on the top, sides and ends of the melons. Plant these about a foot apart, in rows, laying the strings straight. When ready to use untie the string at both ends, grasp one end and run down the garden, pulling out the string. Harvest the loose beans and cook.

CUCUMBERS—To be successful with this succulent table fruit be careful of the seedlings. The best are secured in bottles of a quart each. Remove the bottle before planting. These are called "pickles."

Plant the pickles in clusters in a small bed. A spring card will serve better to keep them moist. Sprinkle with strong brine, and when full grown add sufficient acid vinegar to suit.

PEAS—Every suburbanite is supposed to have the first green pea of the season, otherwise his whole garden is a failure. To do this, purchase the seed early; say in April. The seed may be secured, sealed in cans, of any provision dealer.

Remove the top of can and mix with the peas sufficient soil to grow. Set these cans out in a row, five together. For a trellis take the binds from the house and nail them firmly to posts set along the row of peas.

drills, and cover lightly with soil, the holes being uppermost. These holes are for allowing the sprouts that April g from the seeds inside to grow out. If each seed sprouts you will have from eighty to ninety plants to a melon.

SQUASH—Do not bother with the Winter squash, as harvesting them in deep snow is apt to produce chilblains. Always plant the Summer variety. Purchase one-half ton assorted, rubberneck and Titan squash. Sow these, a dozen in a hill. Let these climb on poles in order to give room for the clusters as they ripen.

LETTUCE—Sow one seed to a hill, three feet apart for ventilation. When grown to a height of about six inches pour one quart whiskey around the roots of each plant. This will give the lettuce a head.

SWEET CORN—Order early in May as many cornbobs as you expect to need ears of corn. Also purchase the best brand of canned corn. Open the can and insert the kernels of canned corn in the small apertures of the cornbobs and plant in rows.

CABBAGES—To one head of cabbage add one pound of corned beef and plant along the vine.

well as to the palate when served on the table. If planted as a wild flower garden they save room. Mix equal parts of the carrot, beet and turnip seed and scatter over the wild garden.

Pick the pods early in October, and when dried shell them into a "can and sort them over."

CARNIVOROUS FAUNA—Such as striped beetles, cut worms, egrets, thousands of squash bugs, caterpillars and other Lilliputian dinosaurs, are a menace to any garden. It is well to have a quantity about, as they form the chief course when a garden fails, although by following the directions of the skilled garden editor of SUBURBAN STRIFE a garden cannot fail to be extremely successful as a novelty.

To drive away striped beetles from cucumbers remove the cukes. Another method is to capture half a dozen bugs, paint out their stripes, which run lengthwise, and paint the stripes running crosswise. Turn them loose, and their odd appearance will readily frighten the other beetles that they will beat a hasty retreat.

For squash bugs use fly paper, rolling a sheet of it up in a skilled imitation of a ripe squash.

For slugs, amipite covered with brown paper with the color of the soil will readily trap them, and as fast as they dig out of one pit they fall into another. One, untied and discouraged, they'll move over into your neighbor's garden.

Outworns should be stalked before sunrise with a pair of wire cutters. Placing the outworm carefully amidst the of the wire cutters and closing them suddenly will so discourage these little pests that they will promptly give up all activities.

THOUGHT AND SPIRIT

Copyright, 1911, by the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner.

ONE of our readers asked an answer to these two questions:

"What are we here for?"
"Do you consider spirit and thought as identical, or is thought the outcome of spirit united with matter?"

The first question has already been discussed in a Sunday editorial. The second question, as to the identity of the spirit and thought, shall be discussed here.

We believe that our readers will be interested in talking over among themselves the extremely interesting and intelligent question.

Our older readers know, and young readers should remember, that half an hour of earnest, intelligent discussion developing individual thought is often better than many hours of reading.

The picture on this page represents an effort to answer the question sent to us. We show you Rodin's splendid marble statue called "The Thinker," and above it a figure that represents the SPIRIT that inspires thought.

It is difficult to make a picture of an abstraction, and this picture is unusually successful.

This is the message which it is intended to convey.

Thought and its works, which include all the achievements of man, the greatest and the least, are results of spiritual inspiration. In one sense thought and spirit are one. But thought is the product of the spirit, modified by the imperfections of the physical human body, through which thought is expressed.

Our idea can be made clear by comparing spirit and thought to the genius of the musician and the sound which issues from the musical instrument.

What the musical instrument is to the genius of the musician the brain of man is to the spirit that inspires thought.

However great the musician, his genius must depend for its expression upon the instrument which translates it and gives it reality in the physical world, through the sound waves produced in the material atmosphere, striking the nerves that carry music to the listening brain.

Give Paderewski a piano out of tune and all of his ability can give you only discord and lack of harmony. Or give to Paganini, the greatest violinist that ever lived, a violin out of tune, and in spite of the genius of the musician you will hear only hideous and disagreeable sounds. The spirit of music must have the RIGHT INSTRUMENTS for its expression.

The spirit that inspires thought, the spirit of man, must have the RIGHT BRAIN for its expression.

The more complicated and highly developed the instrument the more displeasing to the ear is the result when the instrument is out of tune. A violin is infinitely worse than a banjo when both are out of tune, and the banjo worse than the tom-tom of the savage.

Among human beings a highly developed brain out of tune—for instance, the insane brains of a powerful genius like Nietzsche, with his mind broken down—is infinitely more painful, more horrible and shocking than in the case of a human being with a mind in comparison feeble and simple.

Our minds are so little accustomed to deal with the abstract, we live so much in the material world, inanimate objects have so much meaning for us that many human beings live and die without ever thinking at all of the spirit, yet THE SPIRIT IS THE ONLY REAL THING IN THE UNIVERSE.

And thought is the expression of spirit, working through a more or less imperfect human brain.

Bring yourself to think for some time earnestly of the nature and mysterious power of spirit. There is no thought more inspiring, more fascinating, more bewildering.

Consider the Falls of Niagara, with their tremendous power, the vast moving machinery, the cities that are lighted, the blazing streets, the moving cars, all due, apparently, to the power in Niagara. Yet not due to that power in reality so much as to spirit expressed in the thought of man. It was spirit that harnessed Niagara. It was spirit that transferred the power of the Falls to distant cities.

Yet that spirit has neither shape nor weight, size nor color, taste nor smell. You ask a man "What is the spirit?" and he must answer that it is nothing, since it occupies no space, and cannot be seen or felt. And yet he must answer also THAT THE SPIRIT IS EVERYTHING. The world only exists as it is because we see it in the eyes of the spirit. The optic nerve takes a picture, sends it to the brain and the spirit sees the picture.

It was spirit acting on the brain of Columbus, and through him upon others, that brought the first ship to America.

What We Call "Thought" Is SPIRIT Expressed Through the Brain of Man.

It is spirit working and expressing itself through the thought of brains more and more highly developed that has gradually brought man from his low and vile condition of savagery to his present comparative degree of civilization. And that same spirit, working in future ages through brains infinitely superior to any that we can conceive, will establish real harmony on this planet.

Do not say to yourself that this is an abstract discussion, unworthy the attention of serious men. What are YOU but a spirit? You have your hands, your feet, your face, your clothing, your money, your work. But all that is nothing, except for the spirit that lives inside of you, the force which alone is YOU. As the spirit in this picture hovers above the statue of "The Thinker" so in your life there is a spirit, YOUR OWN, which hovers above you or dwells within you, or influences you perhaps FROM ITS HOME TRILLIONS OF MILES AWAY. You can tell nothing about that spirit exists, AND THAT IT IS YOU, and that except for that spirit which animates you, picks you up when you fall, inspires you in success and comforts you in failure and misfortune, there would be nothing at all in this life, and you would not be different from one of the stones in the field or one of the dummies that the tailor sets in front of his store.

The spirit is all, and there is nothing else. And this material world, its colors, sounds, forms and laws exist simply that the spirit may find expression and enjoy contemplation OF THE EXPRESSION OF ITS OWN FORCE.

Compare the spirit and the material world as you see it with the genius that dwells in the brain of a great painter and the works which that painter has to do.

Every statue, painting and church that Michael Angelo created already EXISTED IN HIS SPIRIT. But the spirit could not be content with that existence. It had to visualize itself, it had to see itself CREATED.

In order for the spirit of Michael Angelo to have a real existence there must be provided in the world marble and bronze for statues, paints and canvas for paintings, stone for the church.

The spirit really lives completely only when it sees itself reflected in the material world.

So it is with all of us on a big or little scale.

All the mother love is in the spirit of woman. But it has complete existence only when the mother holds the child in her arms and sees in reality, in flesh and blood, the being that she loves and has created.

The achievements of the greatest men were all locked up within them from the first, but the spirit of such men can reach full realization only when the spirit, acting through the brain and expressing itself through thought, creates the work.

Every man should think of himself from time to time, not as a hundred and fifty or two hundred pounds of bone, flesh and muscle, but as the working instrument, on this earth, of an inspiring immortal spirit.

Every one of us should do his best to permit his spirit to find true expression through good thought and useful action.

We know that all useful work is the result of sound thought. If we realize that thought itself is the expression of the spirit, we are moved by a sense of duty to give to that spirit the best possible expression of which we are capable, the best chance that it can have, dwelling in imperfect bodies and speaking through imperfect minds such as these we possess.

It is an inspiration to realize that men here on earth, gradually improving, becoming less animal and more spiritual as the centuries pass, are destined to develop IN THEIR OWN PHYSICAL BODIES, instruments capable of interpreting properly the spirit that animates us, the spirit that in every one of us is absolutely perfect, without blemish, and suffers only because it must speak through an imperfect instrument and through an imperfect brain.

The race of human beings improves from generation to generation—that we know. The improvement is due to the affection of fathers and mothers for each other and for their children.

The race of ours one hundred thousand years ago was made up of animal like creatures, with huge, projecting jaws, enormous teeth, small foreheads and hideously shaped bodies. Gradually through the centuries we have changed, the brute has gradually disappeared, the pronounced face of man has become flatter. The jaw has gone in, the forehead has come out, and in that forehead, gradually, thanks to the devotion and patient labor of women, we are developing a brain that will ultimately give decent and adequate expression to spirit.

To many this question, "Are spirit and thought identical?" may seem uninteresting, if not foolish.

But that question would seem infinitely MORE foolish to two pigs dozing in their sty. A pig would say, "What do I care about spirit or about thought? I care about swill and about two soft muds."

There are some human beings who approach that mental attitude.

But there are, fortunately, many others who will be grateful to the reader who sends us the question at the head of this editorial.

Spirit and thought are identical in the sense that the genius of the musician and the sound that you hear when his music is played are identical. In music the sound represents and interprets the musician's spirit. And the interpretation and the accuracy of that interpretation depend upon the orchestra, the violin or the piano. When the instruments are out of tune it is not the genius or the musician, but a misinterpretation that you hear.

And with our human brains, most of them out of tune, most of them incapable of expressing anything but the merest, faintest reflection of true spiritual life, there is as yet very little harmony.

But it will come. There have appeared on this earth a few men and a few many women, incapable of a selfish thought, gladly sacrificing everything to duty, giving up their lives readily for the truth or patiently enduring long years of dulness and sorrow for the sake of others. Through such men and women the spirit has spoken clearly. And in days to come the human race WILL BE MADE UP OF MEN AND WOMEN OF THAT KIND.

Through the perfected brain of man, the cosmic spirit, in which each of us is a conscious atom, will speak clearly, and then this earth, our little corner in the universe, will be truly harmonious, governed by the spirit distinctly expressed and instantly obeyed.

By Rene Bache

But, conditions being changed, his plan of operations has been altered. Instead of sailing boldly forth in fleets of outrigger boats, after the old-time style, with a force numbering hundreds of armed and lithe, lithe warriors, the Moros pirate of today establishes headquarters on some remote island, and thereafter from a base of operations conducts futile raids. If successful, he becomes bolder, and ventures further afield in quest of booty. Finding a ship in trouble, he attacks it and murders everybody on board. Coasting the shore, he has a look at the lovely natives, he sniffs the deliciously inviolable, he sniffs it, mmmmm

It was the most particular delight of the Moros to capture and murder Spanish priests and friars, toward whom they entertained an intense hatred. One of their favorite haunts was the Cotabato River, in Mindanao. Here, indeed, was a hive from which the sea robbers literally swarmed. The introduction of a few small steamboats finally made it possible for the Spaniards to hunt them down.

"He feels just as hungry as he did when on holiday, because he has got the hunger habit from plenty of exercise, but now he is not taking the exercise to warrant the hunger, hence the gout.

"The man who is too lazy to walk part of the way into town should get up from his meals still feeling hungry for the first few days after he returns from holiday."

The Homes of the Amphibious Pirates of Mindanao Island.

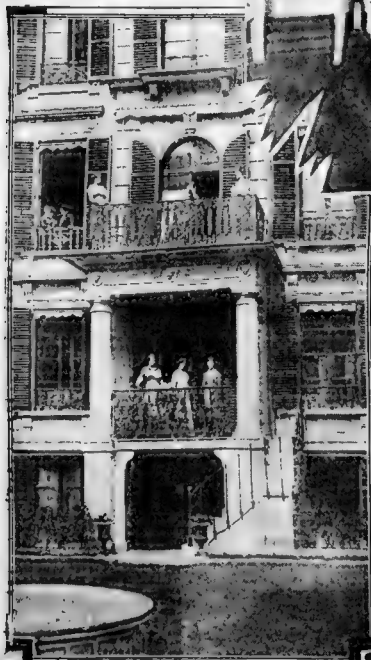

WHY I'VE INVADDED PARIS

LADY DUFF-GORDON, who is the famous "lucile" of dress-creations, and who writes each week the fashion page for this newspaper, has opened a great establishment in Paris, in thus saving the French heart of fashion, so long the center of the mode, she has done a thing (temporarily) to the honor of art.

Paris fell a ready victim to the conquest and in a wonderful mansion, once occupied by Louis Philippe, in the historic Rue de Valenciennes, the banners of "Lucile" are waving in triumph. Here Lady Gordon tells us, she invaded Paris—to be even better than I to give America the absolute best and most ideas and to enhance to fashion page which appears weekly in this newspaper.

By Lady Duff-Gordon

INVADDED Paris to better serve and please my American patrons, and to make my fashion articles the best in the world. Some English people do not know what are the latest things, nor do some of them care, but most of the people of America both know and care.

Louis Philippe's Old Mansion, Now the Fashion Centre of Paris

A Photograph Showing the Gowns "in Action"—the Models Play Bridge and Go Through the Daily Activities of a Fashionable Woman While Patrons Look On.

Now, the season in London is very late. It begins two months later than in New York. By the time the new fashions are out in London and I have then sent to New York, I have lost two months. Your season begins the first of March and the first of September, ours the first of May and the first of November.

Let me explain that when I say new styles I do not mean the form of garments. I make my own style of that kind. By style I mean the materials, the cloth.

I explained this to my people. I told them that to get the new fabrics in time to reach my New York friends and patrons I must take a small room or two in Paris three or four models, go there and get out the model gowns late in the summer for the Fall trade and late in the winter for the Spring and Summer trade. They said to me: "Why not have a Paris house as well as a London and New York house?"

At first I was startled. It was such a daring plan. No other English woman had ever invaded the source of the fashionable supply of the world. Paris is the Mecca of all fashion creators and adapters. Even so long ago as four hundred years they used to carry dressed dolls about to Italy and Germany and Russia to show how they were dressed in Paris.

But the idea captured my fancy. I am an enthusiast. Soon I found myself defending the revolutionary idea.

"You will never do anything so bold," cried my alarmed friends. The more I thought of it the more I produced arguments to reassure my friends, the more was I possessed by the idea of invading the fashion capital of the world.

I went, and I am delighted with the result. Paris was most kind. Instead of finding it alien and unkind it was warm, hospitable and welcoming. Paris is artistic and well-meaning. The art of the nation is the art of the nation.

My Paris house, destined for a clearing house for the convenience of American fashionable women, has become an independent centre. It gave me great pleasure to choose the site fit in the house and employ the best of Parisian associates.

When I chose an old house of the Rue de Valenciennes, between the Champs Elysees and the Avenue de l'Opera, friends said to me: "Why go so far away? Why not be near the Rue de la Paix?" I answered: "I intend that this shall be a distinctive place and I want it to have a distinctive site and surroundings."

Perhaps I was governed a bit by emotion. I knew that Louis Philippe, the English, that he was a long time in England and that he was so general in his cell. At any rate, I was not surprised. It was so general of that period. Every period has its distinct mark of character. The time of Louis Philippe had a mark of character that appeared on the face and other woodwork. In fact, I kept in mind the time of Louis Philippe and accordingly furnished the house.

The Models in the Quaint Garden of Louis Philippe's Old Mansion Where Society Comes to See the Newest Fashions.

And How Paris Took the Invasion

Paris June 7.

It has become the fashion to go to Lucile's for your chocolate. As one drives on the Bois it is as smart to stop there as at Armonville or the Citeaux or the Pre Chateau. And when one has stopped at the great gray stone house with the green shutters, one sits at a huge iron gate and crosses a front court paved with gray flagstones, is admitted through a heavy iron door of massive iron grillwork and enters a fairy palace.

Past broad white stairs, carpeted with purple, we to the garden where our hosts after the exclamation: "Bienvenue!" Out of the close clipped grass, and the glory of the June blossoms, rises a white fountain, a fountain in which grow pink and white lilies and among which dart gold fish.

An archway of lattice work covers a part of the garden, affording shade when the great old fashioned trees do not, at midday. A quaint building at the rear, which had been a coachman's house, and which is used for workrooms, is covered with a trellis and painted a dim blue, the color of the sky. Lucile explained to a party of friends when she was talking about this latest and handsomest of her international chain of establishments, in the "color of distance."

Scattered about one's feet as we roam this dim, beautiful old gar-last cry of fashion. The young girl with the shy beauty of Edna May, of American remembrance, wears the simple, girlish gowns and flower covered hats of the mids of sixties.

Before departing the visitor makes the tour of the novel fashion place, which for five days, at its opening in April, was the topic of the city. Cards had been issued for three days at the opening. It was necessary to extend the time to five days. And each day at least a thousand men and women, smart persons and the titled personages of France, poured through the doors.

Passing up the white stairs with their purple carpet, one reaches first the reception room. Like most of the house its walls are of pale, rosy red clay.

Beyond is a woman's retiring room, daintily as a powder box. Its walls, unlike most of the house, which is in general gray walled, are hung with blue silk. Over this is white lace. Garland is of roses hanging from the ceiling. This and the adjoining room are of the only Louis Seize apartments. The first room, used for the trying on of lingerie, is draped in rose silk with lace covering. From the ceiling wreaths of roses are festooned about the walls and furniture.

Two sitting rooms on this floor have pale gray walls and ceiling. The carpet is of hyacinth blue. The chairs curtains have wreaths of Models Descending from the Great Stage in Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris Place.

The windows of the room in which Lucile is shown I draped with black curtains. On the floor I placed a rug of black with the border outlined by a faint white line. The furniture was of yellow satinwood. I had, you see, the Louis Philippe colors.

It was a work of joy to fit the great house and the historic garden. And when they were done, and on April 4 Paris began to pour in through the doors, I was indeed happy. I, an Englishwoman, had done what never before had been done.

den, are beds of fuchsia and waxen leaved begonias. Here the Parisian sip their chocolate, gossip, and at the same time note Lucile's newest and handsomest creations as worn by four of the most beautiful models.

The British maids wear costumes of white or pale shades, a tinted sunshade softening the light that falls upon her golden hair and exquisite complexion. The Oriental looking maid trails over the gravelled walks and across the new cut lawn in gowns with Persian embroidery and Turkish stuffs. The ultra moderna brunette appears in the pale roses. The other is a wholly new gown, that color which I ideal one as a background for gowns, in the language of Mme. Lucile, "a means nothing."

Across the stage walk models as lovely as goldfish. The stage and garden party as devices for showing gowns are the inventions of Lady Duff-Gordon. The device both eight years ago.

Up and down the stairs, through the rooms and in and out of the garden passes Paris, and Paris exclaims with one voice, and one mind: "This is not dreaming. It is art."

How Vital Organs Are Fed and Forced to Grow OUTSIDE THE BODY.

DR. ALEXIS CARREL and the other scientific wizards of the Rockefeller Institute, New York, have made new and remarkable experiments in growing body organs away from the body.

Dr. Carrel first attracted the attention of the scientific world when he planted the kidneys of one cat in another cat, and the legs of one dog on another dog.

These experiments tended to show how the processes of growth in the body could be regulated and modified by artificial interference.

Going further, Dr. Carrel proved that parts of various organs removed from the body would continue to grow when enclosed in a vessel in a laboratory, or kept "in vitro," as it is termed scientifically. The spleen, kidney, bone, marrow, skin, thyroid gland and other organs of the body were made to grow in this manner.

In the earlier experiments in the growth of organs the transplanted portions were kept in the natural body medium. In the latest experiments by Dr. Carrel and Dr. Monroe T. Burrows, at the Institute, they have modified the body medium by adding distilled water and sodium chloride, and they have thereby produced in many cases a remarkable acceleration of growth, as compared with specimens that were kept in the normal medium.

This discovery is probably of more immediate practical value than any yet made by the investigators. It makes it reasonably certain that before long science will be able to inject fluids into the human body and promote the growth of certain organs. For instance, it was found that when the body medium surrounding the liver of a chicken was diluted by two volumes of distilled water, there was a great acceleration of growth.

This certainly indicates that before long it will be possible to accelerate the growth of a defective liver in a human being. New cells will be grown in an aged man to take the place of those destroyed or made useless by disease.

It has been proved that the growth of kidney tissue can be accelerated in the laboratory by modifying the medium surrounding it. There are many persons who have had one kidney removed for disease. The remaining kidney then has to bear all the work which often proves too much for it. If the growth of the remaining kidney could be stimulated artificially, as these experiments seem to prove that it could, then the sufferer might be restored to good health.

Similar operations, involving artificial growth of organs and tissues will, it is probable, be performed on lungs, heart, spleen, bone, eyes and brain.

The means of promoting growth seem extraordinarily simple. A little distilled water added to the body fluid surrounding one organ, a little sodium chloride added to the body fluid surrounding another organ, and you have amazing growth.

"It may be concluded," say Dr. Carrel and Burrows in their account of their latest experiments in Vol. XIII, of the Journal of Experimental Medicine, published by the Rockefeller Institute, "that the degree of dilution of the culture medium has a marked influence on the rate of growth of splenic tissue. The maximum acceleration was obtained in a medium composed of three volumes of normal plasma (i. e., the normal body medium) and one volume of distilled water, or whatever it may be, and two volumes of distilled water. The growth in this latter medium was very much larger than in normal blood.

In other experiments we found that in diluted blood there was also an acceleration of the growth of the skin, the heart and the liver of chickens. The skin of adult frogs also grew more actively in this medium. "The most efficient degree of dilution varied according to the nature of the tissues and to the species of the animal. While the medium consisting of blood with twofifths distilled water produced the largest growth of splenic tissue, a slightly less diluted medium was more favorable for the liver and the heart, and generally for the skin also.

"The spleen of kidneys was very easily affected by the changes of the dilution of the medium, while the skin of the frog presented its best growth in plasma containing one-half distilled water.

"Normal blood is certainly not the ideal medium for the growth of tissues since slight modifications of the tension, the alkalinity or the addition of certain inorganic salts to the normal medium, increase the rate of the growth of tissues.

"If a tissue or an organ found in the body is the best possible medium it would grow indefinitely, reach an enormous size and become a source of danger to the organism itself. Nevertheless, it would be very important to determine the composition of the medium that each tissue requires for its development.

"Thus favorable conditions could possibly be given to a tissue temporarily without interfering greatly with the nutrition of the other tissues of the organism."

The investigators here point out, as one important application of this suggestion, that when a nerve is cut the fibrous scar which results often prevents the reunion of the severed nerve ends. This is a most important matter for humanity, because a severed nerve may ruin the course of a limb. The discovery is that if the body fluid, which activates the nerve cells, could be stimulated artificially, the severed nerve might unite before a scar formed.

Various portions of tissue reproduced the own characteristic cells. The rate of growth depended on the nature of the tissue and the age of the animal.

The glandular organs of adult dogs started the growth could be varied by the surgeon's handling of it. A small fragment of thyroid, clearly cut, reproduced mainly spindle-shaped cells, but from scrapings of the same tissue epithelial or membrane cells were born. This points directly to the conclusion that the surgeon's knife may change the nature of an animal.

The growth of the cartilage was very interesting. For about a week a very few spindle growing after thirty-six or forty-eight hours. When the animal was only a few days old they began growing much sooner—after the passing of ten or twelve hours. The kidneys grew four or five days after transplantation and continued to do so as long as the nutritive medium lasted. The suprarenal glands, situated above the kidneys and the thyroid gland, which regulates growth in the body, both grew in the same period.

Tissues like cartilage and peritoneum grew slowly for three days, but after a week became much more active, and were in full vegetation after about nine or ten days.

The process of growth was very curious to watch. The first indication of growth was the appearance on the edges of the surface of a few small and irregular granulations. This was a kind of seed, "cytoplasm," from which the cells were to grow. The cells which formed were found to be of two general forms, spindle-shaped and polygonal.

The spindle-shaped cells were born first in all the tissues. Dr. Carrel thinks they are derived from the connective tissue framework of the organs. A little later the polygonal cells appeared. These varied widely according to the nature of the tissue. Kidney tissue reproduced the polygonal cells of the kidney, cartilage reproduced its own polygonal cells and so on.

A very curious fact was that the nature of and spindle-like cells were found slowly and during along the edges of the cartilage," says Dr. Carrel. "From the upper pole of the first mound of tissue a mass of new cartilage intruded and invaded the nutritive medium. After a few days it became so large that it could be seen by the naked eye."

"Progressively the rate of growth became faster. Many irregular cells with long arms now appeared in the plasma about the old cartilage. After nine days the culture was in full activity and the old cartilage had generated outside of the body a piece of new cartilage about a twentieth of an inch long."

When they cultivated bone, "a few large spindle-shaped cells were seen crawling along the edges of bone," writes Dr. Carrel. "They cultivated skin from fragments of the skin of an adult frog. The growth was very rapid. After forty-eight hours the area of new epidermis obtained in some cultures was twice as large as the old fragment of skin."

The thyroid gland of adult dogs grew very rapidly. After thirty-six or forty-eight hours, long spindle-shaped cells protruded at one of several points from the edges of the tissue. After the fifth or sixth day the cultures were in full and sometimes wild vegetation, which lasted as long as the nutritive medium was in good condition.

Fragments of kidney tissue from a young cat grew with remarkable rapidity. On the fifth day tubes began to grow from the tissue into the nutritive medium. These had all the appearance of renal tubules, an important part of the organic structure of the kidney. Another series of experiments consisted in taking the artificially grown tissue and making a new growth from it. This produced extraordinary results. Fragments of an old dog's thyroid that had been grown artificially were placed in a fresh nutritive medium.

Eleven or twelve hours after the growing. "We found," says Dr. Carrel, "that the thyroid of an adult animal came as active as the thyroid of a few days old."

This indicates the possibility of the human tissues, of making part of the body grow like it healthy child.

NO great advance in the development of the human race can be hoped for until the physical disparity between the sexes is first thoroughly understood and accounted for. Scientists have long realized this and efforts have been made to solve some of the many problems which the subject presents. Not long ago two thousand students of both sexes, averaging twenty-one years of age, were subjected to the most searching scientific tests at Amherst College, in order to obtain reliable comparative data. It was found that in almost every respect the men were physically superior to the women, and

THE MAN RACE OF GIANTS

Science Discovers a Mysterious "Growth Chemical" Which, Injected Into the Body, May Double the Size of Man.

Be Able to Make Children as Big as We Wish.

A very important and revolutionary fact established by the experiments at the Rockefeller Institute is that a liquid injected into the body does not necessarily go to the heart before it enters the circulation, as most physiologists have believed it does. It is now shown that the liquid may produce a certain effect in the locality where it is injected without entering the general circulation.

Differences in the Growth of Man and Woman.

Smallpox or influenza in the sexes, yet while adult females appear to be more susceptible to all these diseases, especially the first two, all are believed to be more fatal in adult males. At one time typhoid fever was thought to be slightly more fatal in females than males, but more recent statistics have clearly disproved this. Mortality from pulmonary tuberculosis was formerly greater among females, but now statistics show it to be greater among males.

"Except biliary calculi, then, cancer is the only disease common to both sexes from which adult females suffer more than do adult males, but the rate of increase of cancer is now much greater in men than in women."

Women mature at an earlier age than men, and this fact, Dr. Stewart believes, makes them respond more readily to external and internal stimuli than men.

It is this special susceptibility of women, too, that renders her more liable to attacks of hysteria, neurasthenia, emotional states, and the milder forms of insanity. Instead, however, of this special susceptibility being an evidence of constitutional frailty, as has been supposed, it appears to serve as a distinct advantage, acting somewhat as a sentinel or outpost to ward off attacks upon more important centres.

So, too, woman's well-known tendency to early physical exhaustion serves to protect her from the fatal crash which often comes to man from over-exertion. "He who fights and runs away may live to fight another day," when the emotions, the affections, however, stimulate to activity, as in the case of nursing sick friends. It appears that women can endure more hardships, especially in the loss of sleep, than men can.

All physiologists agree that woman's blood has fewer red corpuscles, contains less coloring matter, is of lower specific gravity and is more watery than man's blood.

In man, as in nearly all animals, the pulse rate is slightly slower in males than in females, in the proportion of 72 to 74 beats per minute for men and 80 for women. But the slowness of pulse, like slowness of respiration, nearly always goes with increased weight, the difference is probably no greater than would naturally be expected. In old age woman's pulse rate is inclined to increase slightly more than man's.

Women excrete less carbonic acid, and therefore is in less need of oxygen and needs it less vitally than man. This is thought to be a factor in women's greater capacity to endure heat.

Degenerative changes in the blood vessels and rigidity of the thorax, both characteristics of senility, are found much earlier in man than in woman. Men suffer from baldness much earlier than women.

The fact that woman lives a more protected life, avoids the stresses and strains that favor senility, may be a factor, but it can hardly be the only factor in her superior tenacity of life.

She lives a more protected life than man because she is differently constituted. If a thousand able-bodied men and a thousand able-bodied women be uniformed, armed and equipped for battle and ordered on a long and weary march to the front, more men would probably reach their destination, while more women would be found exhausted, but more men found dead on the roadside.

Owing to their peculiar psychological organization, women heed the warnings of fatigue and avoid the fatal crash, while man, with his iron will, after complete exhaustion, resolves to take another step if he dies in the attempt.

"So," concludes Dr. Stewart, "after making all due allowances for the greater mortality of man in war and from accidents from dangerous occupations and from masculine causes, there are good reasons for believing that nothing short of a constitutional difference can account for the greater tenacity of life in women."

When science actually attempts the creation of a giant, the most serious problem would be to keep up the rate of growth, which a child begins life. It is necessary to keep up the rate of growth of a tremendous proportion of the body. It would only be the pituitary secretion as abundant as it is during the first year of life.

An average baby fifteen days old is 10 inches long. At the end of a year it is 30 inches long. That means that it increases one-half its total height in the first year. If it went on growing at this rate, it would be nearly 11 feet tall at five years of age, and on its tenth birthday the child would be over 68 feet high. During its first six months of life the infant doubles its weight, and a little farther shows that if it kept on at that rate it would weigh two tons before reaching its fourth birthday.

We know that at present a human being's ordinary increase in stature is principally in the length of the bones, and that a baby's brain and vital organs are nearly as large as a man's. But when growth is controlled artificially it should be possible to produce a man whose brain and vital organs would grow enormously—who would be, in fact, a "superman." But he cannot keep on at that rate, or he would grow about twenty feet in ten years.

In investigating the subject of growth the experts of the United States Government and other scientists have made many new and interesting discoveries.

In the first place it is to be noted that the growth of a child goes entirely by jumps, some long ones, as in the case of the newborn baby, and the others less so. In between it so jumps there is a quiescence. You may examine your little boy sometimes and find that he has grown an inch in a month.

The process of growth by leaps and jumps is called "stature rhythm." The observation is not new, but it has pointed the way to new discoveries and possibilities.

One remarkable discovery is the alternation of long and short generations of humanity. A dozen years or so ago the extraordinary stature of the young women then newly grown up attracted attention. They were three or four inches taller than their mothers, and the question was seriously raised whether a new standard had not been set for the height of the female of the human species. Many theories were put forward to account for this apparent overgrowth of a whole feminine generation, the one generally accepted being that men's outdoor exercises (a new thing for women) was accountable for this phenomenon.

Conservative thinkers ventured to doubt whether physical exercise, however favorable to bodily development in other ways, could possibly augment stature. Their views were disregarded, but now the surprising fact is observed that the girls of to-day who have newly arrived at womanhood are remarkably little. Their stature actually averages less than that of their grandmothers.

Unfortunately, there is a lack of reliable figures relating to the stature of women and men from generation to generation. But such data as exist will seem to show that the height of the average of either sex varies from generation to generation, as if in accordance to some law of rhythm. The fact that the girls of some years are so extraordinarily tall, and the girls of other years (theory) enough to make a man think that what might be expected of a man. Presumably the same law governs the growth in the individual for a long time. But this has to be determined. But it is a fact that the race, like the individual, fluctuates and starts. While it is true that variations in average stature from generation to generation, one must not forget the undeniable fact (as proved by a study of armor and other such evidence) that the men of a few centuries ago were not so tall and large as those of to-day. It is just that, as a race, we are steadily growing by jumps, getting bigger.

There are ever so many other new and interesting facts relating to stature, body weight and other physical characteristics. Medical Doctor, Husebender, of the United States Army, declares that the thing really important in estimating the "stature" is, a power to survive and preserve physical efficiency of a military recruit, is not the stature, but the length of the cerebro-spinal column—that is to say, the distance between the top of the head and the lower end of the backbone.

in the New Millinery

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this news paper, illustrating it with sketches and photographs of her own original models.

Lady Duff-Gordon's new Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City.

While in the case of the small hats, the latest idea is to cover them with closely drawn and suitably colored net patterned with a scroll device in white. Or else finely textured and striped muslin, in blue and white, will be so folded to form a high crown, the mere apology for a brim being of black, green and red, blue, and white and gold, being brought together in the big side bouffant.

Then, do you want to know what is most correct and charming in the way of coiffure ornaments for evening wear, you must take note that though the all-enveloping turban heads the list, as far as smartness and fashion are concerned, it can hardly be said that as regards its actual favor, it must be moved several steps downward. For, candidly, it only suits a certain and somewhat limited type, and so a modified version has been introduced and is already very popular. This takes the form of a band of metallic insertion, narrowly edged with the gold or silver lace, its greatest width at the back being centred with a great motif of shimmering and jewelled tissue, while toward the front it narrows considerably, fastening rather toward one side with a jewelled clasp, which, of course, matches the turquoises or emeralds or coral of the back embroidery. This turban band gives an admirable outline to the head, and with it all allows the face to be framed in the setting of lightly waved hair, which always has such a softening and beautifying effect. At the back, beyond the bondage of the wide band, it is permissible to show clusters of curls if these be preferred to snake curls or the sleek smoothness of the turban coiffure.

A Big Straw Hat Trimmed with Sprays of Lilies, Presenting a Striking Example of the New Back-to-Nature Hats.

The Miniature Corn-Field Hat Shown Above Is Only One Phase of the New Bucolic Millinery.

By Lady Duff-Gordon (Lucile)

NOT because I admire the style, but because it is the style, I am sending you this week two striking photographs of what one might call the new back-to-nature hats.

Personally I am not in favor of turning our millinery into orchards and truck farms or even flower gardens, although I must admit that the effects obtained are sometimes really beautiful. The big straw, trimmed with sturdy lilies, shown in the photograph, for instance, is all that could be desired, while the miniature corn-field in the other photograph is likewise very effective.

And now another novelty note for you in connection with millinery trimmings which, wonderfully varied as they already were, have within the week been increased by the addition of some tall and tapering alerettes of slatted paper and balsa, intermixed with a band or two of netting to match. A scheme of blues is especially attractive, some eight or nine different shades being employed, the darkest coming at the base and the lightest just tingling with color the topmost and tiny bud.

Another decorative affair is a big brush algerette formed of four upstanding sprays of poppies, this more seaweed form of trimming being contrasted with other absolutely flat encircling wreaths formed a long, deeply pink rose, from which falls a fringe of forget-me-not sprays. Either of these two extremes will form an all-sufficient and smart trimming for a Summer hat, while, if you prefer fruit to flowers there are the tall alerettes of massed red currant (which is mentioned when they were first introduced, a few weeks ago), and now, too, bunches of the most realistic lemons and tangerines. Apples, too, are being frequently utilized, one single specimen large enough to win a prize at any show being perhaps the centre of a group of foliage, though prettier by far, I think, is the effect of a couple of little apples on a branch which also bears a spray of apple blossoms.

It would seem, indeed, that we are all going very rural and rustic this season as regards our garden party and river hats, for, in addition to fruits of all kinds, simple field flowers—poppies and daisies, clover and buttercups and waving grasses—will be massed together in apparently careless profusion on both large and small shapes, the former being generally fashioned of Tagel or the more supple and expensive poodle straw,

How a Well-Directed Kick May Turn a Bold Assailant Into a Pleading Victim.

KICKING as a means of defense is demonstrated most perfectly in the French system known as "savate," or "savatier." Skill in kicking may be attained by any woman by practicing the following exercises.

Exercise 1—Stand easily. Take weight upon left foot. Swing right easily back and forth, gradually increasing movement.

Exercise 2—Same as preceding, save that weight is taken upon right foot and the left leg is swung.

Exercise 3—Stand easily, take weight upon left foot and swing the right in a circle as far upward, outward and backward as possible. Circles should be made both forward and back.

How to deliver a rapid and effective kick is shown in the illustration directly above.

The French system of kicking is most complex. It consists of various kicks, guards and counters made with both feet.

The system as taught by leading French experts is one of the most superb methods of exercise known. It provides attacks which are absolutely indefensible even to its own experts.

As a means of defense, it is, of course, most valuable when used against those who are not versed in its tactics.

THE Japanese art of Jiu-Jitsu in its entirety is far too intricate for the average woman to master. There are several little tricks in the system, however, which may be readily acquired. The illustration to the right shows one of them.

The man in the picture has advanced toward the woman with his right foot forward and his right arm extended either to strike or grasp her. Grasping the man's extended hand and wrist, the woman steps forward so that her right foot is behind his right and twists his hand upward and backward.

This trick, effectively executed, will place the assailant at the woman's mercy.

In the advance Jiu-Jitsu there are many tricks by which a woman might render her assailant unconscious or even cause his death.

Such knowledge, in its justifiable use, will be invaluable to women when attacked under atrocious circumstances. Even then it is not necessary to kill, as Jiu-Jitsu provides many ways in which an assailant may be rendered insensible, and kept so until help arrives.

But, for ordinary purposes, the simpler tricks will suffice to protect the woman who is obliged to face the perils of city streets unescorted at night.

What to Do When a

LAST week several methods of self-defense by which any woman may protect herself against footpads and rowdies were given in this paper. Today we are able to present some further suggestions along the same line.

It was pointed out last week, but the caution may well be repeated, that in these days of rowdy-infested streets minding one's "own business" is by no means a guarantee against insult or attack. Nothing short of the power to take the law into one's own hands and administer summary punishment to the offending really saves the situation.

Every woman of average physical strength, courage and self-control owes it to herself and to her weaker sisters to acquire a few of these serviceable tricks by the help of which she can put the boldest thug at a disadvantage and discourage others of his calling.

The art of striking a blow with the utmost force and efficiency is to be gained only by years of careful study and training. To describe, however, how a blow should be struck can be done in a few words.

The first step is to gain thorough ease and freedom by the practice of the simple physical exercise described below. This once gained, all that is needed is to practise the same exercise, increasing the amount of swing used in moving the arms forward and backward in a circular direction. Then, as the arms are moved forward, clench the fist and strike, not forcibly, but easily and lightly at an imagined antagonist. A punching bag will prove of great assistance in practice.

It must always be remembered that the power of the blow depends not upon the strength of the individual striking it, but on the rapidity with which the fist is mov-

Can this Be Why Nat Goodwin

Dreadful Annoying Remarks in Edna Goodrich's Novel Which Every One Says She Wrote with Herself as Heroine and Her Much Divorced Husband as Hero

That Wise Look Which Nat Sometimes Assumes Is the Fruit of Wide Experience.

EDNA GOODRICH, Nat C. Goodwin's fourth matrimonial venture, who has just secured a divorce from him, has written a book.

It is called "The Deynard Divorce," and tells the story of the wreck of the matrimonial venture of Nick Deynard, a popular and wealthy actor, and Brenda Deynard, a beautiful actress.

Ostensibly the book is fiction. As a matter of fact, however, Miss Goodrich has made no effort to squelch the rumor that Brenda, the beautiful heroine of the book, is none other than Edna, the authoress, while Old Nick, the naughty husband, is suggestively enough but a fair portrayal of Nat Goodwin, the authoress's erstwhile husband.

Whether or not the book really presents Miss Goodrich's version of her own domestic troubles, no one can read it without feeling that it does, and Nat is said to be very, very angry about it.

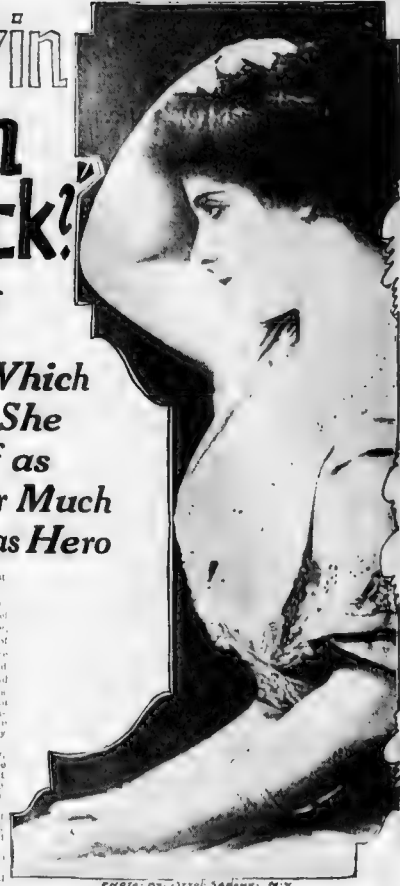

What is calculated to make him particularly piqued is the fact that as he has not yet finished his own book, in which he is to give to the world the inside story and the benefit of his long and varied experience in the life matrimonial, Miss Goodrich will steal a march on him and get her book before the public first.

A couple of weeks ago Nat announced his intention of suing Miss Goodrich to break the trust agreement by which he bound up property worth $1,700,000 for their mutual benefit. It is a significant fact that this development followed immediately after Miss Goodrich's announcement of the intended publication of her book.

"The Deynard Divorce" is not yet, but through the courtesy of the publisher and Miss Goodrich here are a few of the more striking passages in the book.

Nat's untiring pursuit of Miss Goodrich in the days of his courtship will be recalled when one reads, in the opening chapter of the book, of the similar difficulties which Nick Deynard experienced in his slice of the fair Brenda's heart.

ing forward, and upon the weight which is thrown behind it.

The following tricks of defense can be acquired by almost any woman who is willing to devote a little of her time to the task. There is no telling when one may be called upon to put them in to practice:

In defending oneself with the naked hands, as well as in self-defense with walking stick or umbrella, the most important point is the position of the body. As has been said, to stand correctly with arm extended and stick in the hand, will of itself put the body into a position in which it is not easy to be attacked. It is equally true that to take a position, even approximately correct, with the arm outstretched in front, is to put the untrained adversary at a most striking disadvantage.

To one who has gained this simple art of placing the body in the method best adapted to self-defense with the naked hands, it will be a very easy matter to learn to strike a blow which will possess many of the character traits distinguishing the attacks of the trained pugilist. Of course, the average woman will be unable to strike with a force at all comparable to that of the skilled prize fighter, but the ease, freedom and rapidity which are most valuable in fist fighting she can easily acquire

The Umbrella, Skillfully Used, Makes an Excellent Weapon of Defense.

How to Deliver a Blow Properly.

THE illustration to the left shows how effectively a blow delivered by a foot-pat stick with the bare fist or the weapon may be blocked with an umbrella skillfully handled.

A simple exercise to develop skill in the use of the umbrella as a weapon of defense is as follows:

Hold the umbrella extended straight out in front of you, grasping it about two-thirds from the end. Swing body and umbrella as on a pivot from side to side, the umbrella making a wide circle. Then, approaching a pad or pillow placed upon a table or mantelpiece, strike it a hard blow, making this a part of the general swing of the body from left to right.

THE position which would naturally be taken by a woman in delivering a telling blow is well illustrated in the above photograph. The effectiveness of a blow depends largely upon the manner in which the body is controlled.

Adaptness in this respect will be developed by practicing the following exercise:

Stand with feet about fifteen inches apart, left foot in advance. Head is lowered and turned toward left. Rise upon the balls of the feet, swing easily up and down without touching heels. Swing weight easily back and forth. Extend arms straight up in front of the body, left hand on a level with face, right a little lower and nearer to body. Move slowly up and down the room swinging the arms and body with the utmost freedom possible, but always return to about the same position.

Brenda became excited at that old Nick was lying up to his nose. She stood it philosophically as long as she could and then brought suit for divorce.

Before the divorce suit was over, Nick was stricken ill, and in his weakened condition he sent for Brenda. The scene which followed is reported as follows:

"With a supreme effort he braced himself. 'There, there, Significance, he said, do not misunderstand me, I am young. You'll have lots of happiness in the future. With you, you can marry when ever you want.'

After a while, his strength partially recovered, he said: 'Do you remember how once, when I can hardly very late, or very early in the morning, you used to tell me, 'You don't seem to need your Sunshine any more, and what my answer was?'

"She looked up at him, and tried to dry her eyes.

"I know," she answered quietly. "You said you didn't want to see me shine after dark."

Nick Deynard said, and Philip Hampton lost all time in seeking the reward for his friendship to Brenda.

Upon his arrival in New York, he at once repaired to her apartment, and the climax of the book is reached in the scene which follows.

She turned to him, and looked at him with a smile.

"Only last week, when I had the best friend a woman ever had, and she was my friend in my sorrow, even then I was not so close to you as I am now."

"You were not so close to me as you are now," she said, looking at him.

"She made no struggle to protest, but as he came close to him, she felt a strange feeling, she said, very sweetly, smiling at him as he had never seen her smile in all the years of their acquaintance. 'If it only could be, Phil! If it only could be, Phil! If it only could be, Phil!'

Nat evidently believes that it "could be," and he is determined that if it should be his successor, at any rate, shall not profit by the fortune which, in the enthusiasm of his courtship, he is about to publish her book.

"Why, if every woman I married wrote a book," he declared, "they would have to enlarge the libraries, besides, my own book might be a failure!"

Every day the drug habit enlists new votaries.

Some have only a cough to be soothed—or a headache—or stomach distress.

And it is not nearly severe enough to make a physician seem necessary.

Especially when an obliging druggist will mix up a "concoction" or prescribe a "patent medicine."

By just such apparently innocuous steps, thousands are daily acquiring this demoralizing habit. They are learning to drug themselves into a false relief from pain.

Dr. Richard C. Cabot

has performed a real service in exposing the insidious temptation of this vice. It is a nation-wide peril, it lurks at every door—some doctors even encourage it.
